Speed Date Decision Making

A structured speed-dating format lets up to a hundred people converge on a decision fast.

Key steps

Define the question or challenge to solve, and place people face to face in speed-date position for five rounds of three minutes to build on each other's ideas.

Ask everyone to write down their three favourite ideas, then speed-date again in three five-minute rounds to present them and pick the one they like most from their partner. Converge further in groups of six down to a shortlist of three, and have the group choose a winning idea democratically.
