Team up!

Pairing people around the same struggle — not the same answer — makes peer support feel real instead of preachy.

Key steps

It's good to be connected to inspiring people with all the answers, but it can also be exhausting to always hear from people who never seem to struggle where you're struggling.

Team up! connects people with a similar development need so they can share plans, experiments and failures as equals — including the practices that didn't work at all, which can be just as inspiring. Connect people around their questions, not around ready-made answers, and let the group develop its own ideas.
